category	solution
enforce	Hire more police both	Locate the root source of the crime, and initiate public programs to target these sources. For example, if drug use is prevalent in a community, start outreach programs that target users before they begin, or help addicts safely get clean and sober. For violent crimes, increase the level of punishment in order to deter others from committing the same crime.
neither	Addison needs to identify what type of crime and which neighborhoods are being impacted the most. The current statement seems like fear mongering and doesn't hint at any solutions.
neither	Open his world view a little broader and see what areas of low crime are doing in order to reduce it.
neither	form a neighborhood watch neither	It needs to fix whatever systemic issues it has causing the crime to increase.
enforce	Police need to be placed at placed of high crime.
reform	Support social programs and initiatives that get people out of bad situations, poverty, addiction, etc. He can also join his local neighborhood watch, if one exists, or look to form one if it does not.
reform	Addison needs to invest in crime-prevention tactics, including working to help its citizens escape poverty.
reform	Crime has been on the rise over the last three years almost everywhere, so Addison should focus on community outreach and education as well as improving access to resources and help to those in need of it.
reform	Maybe talk to the city counsel or the mayor at town hall.
neither	It sounds like they have a bad problem reform	I'm not sure there really is a problem. The person seems a bit unhinged and unreliable, and without more information, I can't really make a judgment about what needs to change. I suspect that more community spirit and services would help in just about any situation.
reform	investigate the cause of the crime.
both	They could increase policing in certain areas, they can also try to look at what types of crimes are occurring and try to stop it at the source, for example if there's a lot of theft because people are lower income they could increase social programs and try to improve their economy.
enforce	Add more police.
reform	figure out the root causes and address them. Is it drugs? Is it that people do not have jobs? what is the underlying issue and fix that enforce	In order to reduce crime, we must look at the root cause of what is causing the crime to begin with. In some cases, violent crime can be prevented by increasing police presence in the community. Response times are critical when situations escalate to become violent. Increasing penalties for committing crimes can also be reform	They could increase jobs or try to supply work for youth in order to keep people out of trouble and disincentivize crime.
enforce	Have better policies of reporting crime and streetlights.
both	Arrest criminals and aid in social programs so people who may commit crimes do not need to do so.
enforce	Make crimes punishable with no "catch and realease" If you commmit a crime you can't have bail reform	to gather local people with similar opinions to make a statment neither	everyone should be aware about the crime.

neither	It's impossible to say based on the information. I would need to know what type of crime and who/what is being targeted. There is no good answer based on what this person is saying.
enforce	Increase the presence of police around the city reform	Review crime statistics data to see what types of crime are increasing, then implement measures aimed at reducing those specific types of criminal activity.
reform	Addison needs to look at the root causes of the crimes that are being committed in the city. Is there rampant inequality, high unemployment rates, and divisions among its citizens?
reform	Invest in education and social services.
reform	They need to see what is causing the rampant increase and crime and find a enforce	Increase policing patrol
both	It would depend on the demographics especially income levels. More background is needed, but generally more policing and possibly more help for people.
reform	Addison should work to identify the causes of the crimes being committed and work on helping solve those social problems.
enforce	Better training for police, fix up the city reform	Petition his local government to take action.
reform	Introduce more programs to help those who are impoverished. Introduce more mental health options for its citizens. Have a strong network of after-school programs for children.
enforce	They need to step up law enforcement efforts particularly to fight violent crime.
reform	They could create community outreach programs to help people feel pride in the city that they live in. If they feel pride and a sense of community they may want to protect it and keep it crime free.
enforce	Be more aware of the times crimes happen and add more law enforcement around that time.
neither	Move to another place.
enforce	They need a larger police force reform	Determine what s causing the increase, then stop it.
reform	Implement programs that will help people get off the street by helping them find jobs or housing.
enforce	Addison needs to increase police presence and have severe consequences for neither	Reduce violent crime reform	Addison needs to stay away from the source of crime by not holding alcohol in his hands and drinking (or a molotov) and instead ask other people not to drink either.
reform	Find ways to help people with food, shelter, and mental health needs.
reform	Addison needs to figure out what is the cause to the crime rising in the past three years, it can't just be a coincidence. Find the cause, have the effect, and figure out a enforce	Be stricter on repeat offenders, establish a mental health facility and have more cops patrolling.
both	One way to start would be to increase policing, that might help with the immediate problem. However, providing education and job training opportunities can help reduce crime by providing individuals with the skills and resources they need to become productive members of society.